August 21, 1995 Vol. 44 No. 8 From magazine - first paragraph or so from the Jerry Garcia article.... What a Long, Strange Trip By Steve Dougherty Jerry Garcia Raised the Dead to Joyous Heights, But Bad Habits Finally Silenced the Truckin' Troubadour BEARDED AND GRAY, A MIDDLE-AGED man whose weight sometimes ballooned to 300 pounds, Jerry Garcia seemed the antithesis of what a rock star is supposed to be. He giggled with childlike enthusiasm when he talked, dressed always in a little boy's playground uniform of T-shirt, sneakers and dungarees and sang in the cracked and reedy voice that made him sometimes sound on the verge of tears. His idea of stagecraft was to stand stock-still and utter not a word to the delirious multitudes who adored him. And yet he was a riveting figure onstage, a benevolent Buddha whose face beamed with merriment and sometimes sorrow as crystalline notes floated and soared and burst from the custom-made guitar that he seemed to play not with his hands, but his heart. "For me," Garcia once said about the music he performed for over 30 years as leader of the Grateful Dead, "it's always emotional." Other Articles In This Magazine.
